BIO:

Gregg's early exposure to art from his artist father and a love for nature instilled by his mother shaped his dual passion for painting and photography. Despite a demanding corporate career, photography became a lifelong goal and creative outlet during his extensive business travels. Through OSP Images, LLC, a photography company he shares with his daughter Meghan, they collaborate to support conservation nonprofits by donating all profits to organizations that focus on the protection of the natural world.

In 2017, Gregg ventured into encaustic painting—an ancient art technique that involves using hot beeswax. He typically employs this method in conjunction with various other mediums to initially craft an underpainting- using a range of materials such as pigments, pastels, digital prints, or watercolor. Wax is then applied to create more depth, often yielding an “ethereal” appearance. This process results in mixed media art inspired by his photographic journeys and exploration of the natural world.

Gregg resides and creates in both Fall City, WA, and Manzanita, OR. His artwork has been exhibited in several galleries across Washington and Oregon. Like his approach with photography, he contributes a portion of the proceeds from his art sales to charitable causes. Additionally, Gregg serves on the boards of several nonprofit organizations in the arts and conservation sectors.
